The choral piece “Rukovet No.1” for choir (SATB) by Sladana Marić presents a modest personal attempt to honor the choral compositional tradition of Serbian composer Stevan Stojanović Mokranjac¹ (1856-1914), regarding the anniversary of 160 years from his birth in 2016. He was the most important figure of Serbian musical romanticism during which the quality of certain choirs was recognized on the international scene. Mokranjac composed fifteen choral suites or rhapsodies of gathered and arranged traditional songs to which he gave the name “Rukoveti” (“Garlands” or “Song-Wreaths”). The basic principles of Mokranjac, and in this case of Marić, while composing her first rukovet, were the following: (1) choosing short songs of high standards of quality (melodies with lyrics); (2) grouping songs by similarity of content or the region they come from; (3) songs gathered and arranged as a rukovet on the basis of other cyclic form, such as suite and sonata, are different in mood, character and tempo, but at the end make one solid unit; (4) traditional melodies are not changed, they are artistically treated with applying polyphony and counterpoint; (5) special attention is paid to the psychological connections of words and music: making dialogs between, for e.g., male and female choir, solo and choir, etc.

Therefore, the “Rukovet No.1”, by Sladana Marić is a secular choral a capella composition for four voices (SATB), highly inspired by Mokranjac’s creative interpretation of folk tunes. This music piece is based on four short Southern Serbian traditional melodies or songs with traditional lyrics different in mood, character and tempo, arranged into a single unit, artistically treated with applying both vocal homophony and polyphony. Performers are expected to have experience in singing polyphony and a wide range of voices, although further adaptations of lowest or highest notes are acceptable. The main obstacles in performing this piece to many performers may be the language (especially the letters š, č, and đ, and their sounds) and the traditional lyrics, thus, by providing the translation and the phonetic chart in English, the composer encourages all performers to explore their possibilities and enjoy performing this vocal piece.

LYRICS of the “RUKOVET” by Sladana Marić

Naša doda Boga moli oj, dodo, oj dodole!
Da porosi rosná kiša, oj, dodo, oj dodole!
Polijte ih, ne gledajte, oj, dodo, oj, dodole!
Da nam rodi godinica, oj, dodo, oj, dodole!

Our Doda* prays to God, oj, dodo, oj dodole!
To dew the dewy rain, oj, dodo, oj dodole!
Water them, do not look, oj, dodo, oj dodole!
May the year be fruitful, oj, dodo, oj dodole!

*Dodá/ dodole - was/ were virgin girls usually in white clothes doing a ritual by singing and dancing, asking the rain to fall.

Tri devojke zbor zborile, međusobom govorile:
Na vedroj tijoj noći,
na jasnoj mesečini,
kamen moste, ne nihaj se,
drago moje ne nadaj se,
ne daju mene, dragi, za tebe.

Zdravcę venčę, beru li te mome.

Malka moma cveće brała rosná gradinka,
gde to je brala tam je zaspala među cvećeto,
vo rosná livada moma zaspala među cvećeto.
Cveće ti je usahnulo što si nabrala.
Neka sahne, neka vene, drugo ĉu da berem.

Three girls are talking with each other:
In the serene quiet night,
on a clear moonlit,
they are connecting stones, do not hope,
my dear do not expect me,
they will not give my hand, my dear, to you.

Zdravac the plant, are the girls gathering you?

A young girl was picking flowers in dewed field,
and there she fell a sleep, between the flowers,
in the dewed field, a young girl fell a sleep, between the flowers,
The flowers you picked have withered (dried-up).
Let it wither (dry), let it fall away, I will collect other.
